totally lost. The black-eyed, olive-complexioned, voluptuous Spanish maiden spreads into the bounteous wifehood and maturity; you no longer look for her sanguine cheeks and curly tresses on the canvas or panel of Marillio or Camporeale.

Aha, alas! all the Old World runs to flesh with added years; the Anglo Saxon, Teutonic, Latin, and Slavonic races are unwilling that their daughters shall stop within the boundaries of grace. The young women of the century, alone preoccupied with the narrow, narrow, narrow limitations of the modern, do not care for woman, keeping them, as they may be within their task development, their loveliest blossoming. Nature was wise, perchance, to strike an average, and so benefit both hemispheres. But since she does not, let us be content with our own weakness and sensibly growing loss. With the ideal and the classic t possibly growing less. We are much nearer the ideal and the classic than the rest of the globe is. Let our women rejoice in the fact; are not fat, but firm, and of a proper middle; are not accumulating an overplus of flesh. If they need consolation, they should remember that adipose matter is not given with discrimination; that Nature ordains that it should be too much or too little; and that, all things considered, the latter is far preferable.

The Greek statues, still regarded as perfection in art, are prototypes of beauty; and the American man like his other women. The old masters, barring Rubens and his reproductions of his two huge, flabby, waxy, painted goddesses, saints, and madonnas with out-leaning to stoutness. The great beauties of history, the fascinating heroines of poetry and fiction, were slender, limber creatures fiction. There can be no untold story.
